

All At Once

Everything burns at once:
all things stop moving in a precise dawn of heat—a pause releases a cavalry of moments—each adamant development, every causing,
meddles name with namer.

Chords of momentous beings frolic, or bend over the sky's edgy romance
barricaded against nothing
we blow up, blossom,
and weather it out
all at once.